

Net Neutrality: the Fight is on!

A Discussion with Josh Silver

WED, 10.27.2010: 8pm
Multipurpose Room, Rutgers Student Center

We need to keep the Internet free, open and neutral. This is vital to ensuring that everyone can connect and share content freely, that we can access information, and visit the Web sites and say what we want online free from discrimination or interference. The phone and cable companies that control access to the Internet for most Americans want to get rid of Net Neutrality. They want the power to decide which sites go fast or slow and which won't load at all. We can't allow this to happen. If we do, our democratic platform for free speech and innovation will disappear.

Josh Silver is the President & CEO of Free Press a national, nonpartisan organization that he co-founded in 2002. Free Press engages citizens in media policy debates and creates a more democratic and diverse media system. Josh has published extensively on media policy, campaign finance and other public policy issues.

Sponsored by SC&I Department of Journalism and Media Studies, Undergraduate Education, The Daily Targum